Frederic roared down the block, the wind whipping past his ears, brick 12 buildings and storefronts going by in a blur. Nothing was stopping him, 24 not after he had sunk that three-pointer just under the buzzer to win the 39 church league game. This was his fourth year as a point guard for Sacred 53 Heart, but only the first year he'd been off the bench. He'd never been tall 68 or fast, so he'd slowly made up for it by practicing until his aim was 83 perfect. And now, finally, all that work had paid off. 93

"Gram!" he shouted, skidding his bike on the dirt lot in front of the 107 apartment house. Inside, Gram was already laughing, her long red-and- 118 white cane waving like a bandleader's baton. "Tell me about every single 130 minute, and start from the beginning," she said. 138

"But—" Frederic interrupted, wanting to tell her immediately about 147 his last shot. 150

"You should know, Frederic," she said, her blind eyes somehow 160 finding his face, "the longer the beginning of the story, the sweeter 172 the end." 174

Frederic finally caught his breath from his frantic ride home, smiled, 185 and began at the beginning. 190
